What is Attention Autism?

Attention Autism (often called Bucket Time) uses visually stimulating and joyful activities to capture attention, build engagement and develop communication, thinking and social skills.

It's about curiosity, connection and having fun together!

Why is it important?

Attention Autism helps children develop the building blocks for learning. It gives everyone – autistic and non-autistic children – the opportunity to explore, comment, share ideas and enjoy being part of a group.

All children can watch, take part and achieve in their own way.

The Benefits for All Children

Extends Focus and Concentration

Builds sustained attention spans gradually – from focusing on one thing to learning to shift and share attention.

Enhances Communication

Encourages both verbal and non-verbal expression by sparking curiosity and creating natural reasons to comment or ask questions.

Builds Social Interaction Skills

Teaches vital group skills such as turn-taking, sharing attention, waiting and cooperating with peers.

Reduces Anxiety

Uses predictable and structured routines, giving children comfort, clarity and confidence during learning.

Boosts Confidence and Independence

Moves children from passive observers to active, confident participants – helping them become more independent learners.
